

Monticello Monograph Series Adds New Titles

Three new titles have been added to the Monticello Monograph Series, published by the Thomas Jefferson Foundation, Inc.

Free Some Day: The African-American Families of Monticello by Lucia Stanton, Shannon Senior Research Historian at Monticello's International Center for Jefferson Studies, relates the stories of the men, women and children of the Fossett, Gillette, Hemings, Hern, Hubbard and other families and who lived in slavery on Jefferson's mountaintop plantation. The book includes genealogical charts of many of the families.

Saving Thomas Jefferson's House: The Levy Family and Monticello, 1834-1923 by Melvin I. Urofsky, director of the doctoral programs in public policy and administration at Virginia Commonwealth University, describes the preservation efforts of the Levys, who owned Monticello for 89 years before transferring it to the newly formed Thomas Jefferson Memorial Foundation in 1923.

Jefferson's West: A Journey with Lewis and Clark by James P. Ronda, H.G. Barnard Professor in Western History at the University of Tulsa, retells a compelling part of American history by contrasting the expectations President Jefferson had for the Corps of Discovery with what Lewis and Clark actually experienced on their trek.

The Monticello Monograph Series was launched April 13, 1993, to commemorate the 250th anniversary of Jefferson's birth. The series' nine softcover books, which are designed and written for a wide audience, cover various aspects of Jefferson's diverse interests and legacy.

The Thomas Jefferson Foundation also has published Thomas Jefferson: Musician and Violinist by Sandor Salgo, emeritus professor of music at Stanford University. The book explores a less-recognized side of Jefferson: his love of music and his talent as a violinist.

The four new books, the other titles in the Monticello Monograph Series, and a wide range of other Jefferson-related publications can be ordered online at www.monticello.org/shop.html.
